Message From the Network Chair

Happy February. While this month often brings cold and challenging weather - in Washington, D.C., we are currently blanketed in snow and ice - it also offers a meaningful reminder of love, generosity, and compassion. My children's schools have even shifted from traditional Valentine's Day celebrations to "Kindness Day" events, and I appreciate the intentional focus on encouraging kindness.

In the legal profession, especially in litigation, kindness can be easy to overlook. It might even feel counterintuitive due to the adversarial nature of our work. Yet civility and empathy strengthen our advocacy, enhance our credibility, and support more productive relationships with clients, colleagues, and opposing counsel.

The value of empathy and civility is perhaps most evident in dispute resolution, where cooperation, respect, and constructive communication often determine the success of a mediation or negotiation. These principles are also central to the work of our new Alternative Dispute Resolution Subcommittee, which launched last month with an insightful program on Neutral Selection. If you weren't able to attend, the recording is available on ACC's website, and more engaging programming from our ADR leaders is already on the way.

In the meantime, don't forget to register for our "State of the Court" program on February 24th, where we'll review significant recent decisions and preview key matters before the Supreme Court.

And remember: kindness is not a departure from strong lawyering—it is an essential part of it.

chennessy@cozen.com

Chris focuses his practice on litigation and represents businesses across numerous industries. He also assists his clients with risk management and conflict avoidance and works with them to understand their businesses from the inside out. This allows him to assist those businesses throughout the gamut of their operations, including drafting and negotiating contracts, employment, and non-disclosure agreements; developing written policies concerning biometric information; assessing insurance and risk management needs; and developing litigation strategies. Chris's litigation and trial experience enables him to protect the rights of his clients through verdict, and also informs his counseling strategies.

The wide range of Chris's experience is evident from the variety of industries in which he has represented clients.

He has represented multiple defendants – both employers and timekeeping technology companies – against alleged violations of the Illinois Biometric Information Privacy Act (BIPA) and the Genetic Information Privacy Act (GIPA). He has extensive experience defending timekeeping technology clients and employers in BIPA class actions and employers and businesses in GIPA class actions. He has also helped clients with ERISA claims brought by union pension and welfare funds alleging improper or insufficient contributions under multi-employer plans and defended employers from wage grievances brought pursuant to collective bargaining agreements. Chris has significant and varied experience in more traditional litigation involving personal injury and property damage claims, handling those cases from case inception through verdict. He has experience in defending product liability claims that result in both property damage and personal injury, including product failure cases in the plumbing industry and personal injury cases arising out of claims against retailers and manufacturers of dietary supplements.
